

This week I got to be the PO over the project. My initial vision of the project was that the application could generate a random route based on the inputted preferences. At the end of the week during our sprint review I got to test the application and more than fulfilled my expectations. Beforehand (at the monday meeting) I had told the Scrum Master Wincent about the specific tests that I expected the application to pass E.G when I change from nature to urban it changes the generated route, or when I change the length it also changes the route. Also as a PO I feel like I got even more than what I asked about since there were several improvements in the front-end (websites look).

For this week I think we learned a lot about the importance of good planning since this week I certainly felt that the tasks we set up were more concise and followed the INVEST criterias more. Also I think it was a good idea to split the group into two different groups (one for front-end and one for back-end) that solved the issue of 'having too many cooks in the kitchen'. Overall I don't think we could have done anything better. We all maybe felt a little disappointment for last week's effort and not getting all the tasks done and hence this week we probably overachieved and did an amazing job.

This week my deliveries were to solve the functionality of how the route is generated for persons with disabilities. It went well and now when the user checks the mark the route will avoid all paths that contain stairs.

For the agile part of the project I think we kept the same standard as the previous weeks such as on the monday and friday meetings we had a check with the PO (this week it was me) if what was done was OK or not. We actually did not use the KPI:s as this week either since we overall as a group felt that it was useless in that it did not give us anything special. Which is one of the things that I would like to use more of since I think they are a good follow-up tool.

Next week is to present the application and also write the final report. Hopefully I will get some extra time after studying for the exams.
